If the outcome is beyond our control then we should control the conditions for achieving our goal. “Today, we use meditation as a catalyst to bring us into the present moment and wake up. It acts as a catalyst to cultivate the all-knowing mind and clear away delusion and confusion.” -Sigal “Being present in a particular moment means the quality of being here with you now. It has little to do with thinking about the future or planning and working toward a particular achievement.” -Tenzin Gyatso “Of course, being present is important. It is the most helpful way to live. But, there is a danger. It is easy to think that we are just present and don’t have to engage in anything, create goals, plan ahead, or work on achieving them. Being present without engaging, however, will lead to a stagnant mind and empty life. It is clear that we need to actively engage in life and to make plans. These will not only help us to become better present, but they will also help us to achieve things. The more we engage, the better.” -Tenzin Gyatso “

#1 ON USER RATING REDDIT 14 Jan 2018 20:00:22 +0000 farce and the farce. It's hard not to feel sorry for the people behind "Call of Duty: Black Ops 4"--both the developers at Treyarch Studios and the millions upon millions of players who buy this game in the hopes it will be excellent. I personally bought the game straight after its announcement, excited to play a game that would further the franchise's standing as one of the best of them all (Treyarch). If someone promised to give me a metal chicken capable of beating up dinosaurs in a futuristic science fiction landscape, I would have bought it right away. But as Black Ops 4 has finally hit store shelves, I'm irate with a team of people who have designed, developed, and created this game. What started off as decent sci-fi fantasy experience has become a sloppily coded mess of ludicrous content. And I'm not saying this game is unsalvageable, but this is pretty damn ridiculous. Bugs and technical issues have plagued the game, leaving a large number of players on PC unable to join one another in multiplayer matches. This game is dated, and it's nothing more than is a showoff. We'll talk about that in its review, but in short, Black Ops 4 is a mess, and a good game should never have been let out in such a state. But I'm also frustrated with the game's designers, because this is just the tip of the iceberg. Players will face crushing challenges, immensely long and tedious quests, and almost anyone can see the lore behind the plots and try to rationalize it, but for Treyarch, this game is beyond ridiculous. "Call of Duty: Black Ops 4" is disastrous. But I'm angry. Okay, it's not terrible, but I want to say it's nearly deserving of its rating, because this is so disappointing. Treyarch, the studio that brought us this beast of a shooting game series, has essentially made this

Accurate reflections of biopsy of suspicious or malignant cells obtained from slides of fine needle aspirate or other fluid samples provide for definitive diagnoses or can obviate the need for surgical biopsy. Aspirates of other body fluids such as bronchial lavage and urine are similarly useful. The specimen is obtained from the tumor, and the volume of fluid is reduced by use of a needle in a ratio of 1:500 to 1:10. In the past, it was difficult to effectively concentrate the aspirate for microscopic examination. A number of devices have been developed which are useful for concentrating samples of blood, or other body fluids. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 2,267,879 teaches a small centrifuge apparatus having an outer tube for holding a sample, and an inner tube having a smaller bore. Samples are obtained with a syringe and needle and introduced into the outer tube. When the apparatus is rotated, the inner tube spins, substantially separating the liquid from the cellular components in the form of a layer. U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,359,053 and 4,359,054 to Mitchell et al. show a centrifuge having a manifold chamber formed in a

New Jersey's highest court this week limited the freedom of a couple who had a fertility doctor implant multiple female embryos using his own eggs, at the couple's request, to be born with disabilities. The New Jersey Supreme Court's ruling is the latest ruling by the U.S.'s highest court to make it more difficult for same-sex couples to have children with their own genetic material. In December, the court ruled that bans on marriage equality extended to the federal government, and in June, the court ruled that some states can refuse to recognize marriages of same-sex couples if the state doesn't recognize their marriage. In this case, the legislature banned abortion and created a mechanism for people to get permission to bring a child to term even after he or she is born with a defect, whether caused by genetics or a doctor's error. A year earlier, a New Jersey law enacted in 2012 required doctors to obtain permission from the superintendent of any public hospital before performing non-therapeutic abortions on minor girls under the age of 14. Last year, a federal court invalidated New Jersey's law, and this week, the state's highest court upheld that ruling. "The right of individuals to have a family of their own, an individual's right to privacy and the right to pursue a meaningful and fulfilling personal life are among the most cherished rights in the Bill of Rights," the court wrote. "[T]he law protects the sanctity of [these] rights... with constitutional urgency. It is not, and never will be, a subservient authority.
