The game comes with a “Player Intelligence” mode – Soccernomics – which is designed to recreate the real-life scenarios experienced by football players. To make that mode effective, “Player Intelligence” mode also creates a new “Ultimate Team” mode, which incorporates more data from real-life players, in order to deliver superior quality Ultimate Team transfers. The team is already generating loads of information and feedback from players, who are already getting a taste of “Player Intelligence” mode. We’ve been working closely with the community to understand the behavior of players and how we can bring new information to the game in order to make it a better football experience. Some of the things we learnt included: * Positioning – One of the best places to find free space is in the middle of the pitch. * In-stance transitions – When players engage with each other, they are more inclined to run into other players after they've touched them. * Placement at corners – Players who are not involved in defending the corner often get into offensive positions. * Defensive positioning – Players who don't play offensively tend to position themselves in spots that are relatively safe. These are just some of the things we learnt. The data generated is fed into our development and AI teams which bring the new information to the game. There is another aspect that we are especially looking forward to implementing and which is being closely followed by the development team. Season Pass owners will be eligible to receive a code to participate in the beta test of "Player Intelligence." This means that you will be able to play "Player Intelligence" mode at the same time as the beta-test and might get to participate in the feedback mechanisms and help in making the game better. This beta test will be an invaluable experience to us and we welcome any feedback. We hope that you enjoy the mode as much as we enjoyed creating it. Happy footballing! Questions and Answers: What is the "Player Intelligence" mode? "Player Intelligence" mode is a new mode designed to bring information generated from live play to the gameplay experience.
