What's new:

This is a welcome change from all the storm, war, and siege flags featuring over-the-top hangers-on, out of step with the majesty of the campaign. Here the fantasy world is at the forefront, offering the best possible match for the castles, ballads, and heralds of the game. Flag of Gazek Approach with caution. The king was blessed with the gift of magic, and his spells may be beyond your protection. Stat box on left, detailing some of Gazek's abilities (some spoilers). Origins Alphariscal stands in the center of the green forest, lost and filled with sorceries. He is a wise man who has been drinking deeply from the waters of the forest, learning many of its secrets. He stands on the precipice of a volcano that was once the home of his kind. Strength You are a powerful warrior. Finesse You are both cunning and ferocious. Alphariscal knows all the secrets of the forest, as well as many secrets of other life and lore. Wisdom You are skilled in magic. Resources Veins of Stone Mushroom spawn. Bottles of Milk You get to steal milk! You never know what you are going to find when you randomly run into the forest. If you are lucky, you'll find something even better than in the Stat box. Orcs and Gnomes by the Enchanter's Stone Along the path to Alphariscal you see the stone circle of elves and gnomes next to the stone tower. If you are lucky, you'll see a Cactium, but more likely you'll hear the nonvocalization from them that is known as Elven Mage Talk. Sometimes the cone or cone-like thing can be seen from afar as a bright light. Fisher Folk by the Enchanter's Stone Fisher folk are the people who catch the cactium angelfish. Along the path to the Enchanter's Stone you will encounter the shop where there are fish. In the rare instance you run into a human, try to claim from them an item of equipment for yourself, as they do not want to mess with you (some of them may be less threatening than the orcs and gnomes). You can return it whenever you want
