Q: Save in the background in an iphone app I have an app (iPhone app) which operates in the background. It captures certain images and saves them to the user's Photos library. There are certain scenarios where the app needs to save multiple images within a short duration (eg: 1 seconds). I am unable to find out how to achieve this. The UIImagePickerController delegate methods are called at time intervals that can be controlled by the user. A: Take a look at the picker view delegate method: - (void)pickerView:(UIPickerView *)pickerView didSelectRow:(NSInteger)row inComponent:(NSInteger)component In the above method, you can use the UIDocument class to do the saving of the data and you can save the data like this: //saveFile is a NSString with the file name NSError *error; [documentData writeToURL:saveFile atomically:YES error:&error]; Now this is not a very clean code but it will do the job. After writing the data, you can use the saveTicket method in this UIDocument class to sync the data to the desktop. Elevated expression of laminin beta 1 by cultured skin fibroblasts from patients with split skin syndrome. In split skin syndrome (SSS), a novel form of junctional epidermolysis bullosa (EB) associated with mutations in the laminin 5 gamma 3 chain (LAMB3), local lesions result from loss of the skin basement membrane zone (BMZ) integrity. In spite of the observed BMZ alterations, there are no data available on the expression of major BMZ components by keratinocytes, dermal fibroblasts or endothelial cells. We therefore have examined the expression of the BMZ components, laminin alpha3beta3gamma2, laminin alpha5beta3gamma2 and laminin beta3 by cultured skin fibroblasts from patients with mild to moderate severity SSS and established the expression pattern of the key BMZ proteins LAMB3 and LAMC2, which are responsible for anchoring the laminins to type IV collagen and type VII collagen respectively. Our results demonstrated that cultured fibroblasts from skin lesions of patients with mild to moderate severity SSS expressed significantly higher levels of laminin alpha3beta3
