Samsung, LG Unveil Their New High Definition Flagship Smart TVs Samsung and LG have joined the race to the new high definition content in smartphones and tablets. The two companies announced their latest HD set top boxes at the Consumer Electronics Show in Las Vegas. The new Samsung and LG TVs are available to purchase now and will come in sizes ranging from 46 inches to 55 inches. These new products are a step up from the 32-inch sets that Samsung has made over the last few years. LG and Samsung have also announced new LED LCD TVs that boast much higher resolutions than the previous sets. LG's 4K HD TV boasts a resolution of 3,840 x 2,160 pixels while Samsung's 4K UHD TV offers a resolution of 3840 x 2160. To give you a comparison, the current 1080p TVs that are in stores right now offer a resolution of 1080 x 1920 pixels. Both LG and Samsung have also announced that they are both including built-in web browsers and applications for their sets. They will also be using Google Play and Samsung Apps to stream content for their viewers. “With sophisticated content displays, the two companies are expanding on the experience consumers have come to expect from their televisions, smartphones and tablets,” said Peter Lee, executive vice president of home entertainment at Samsung. “We are very excited about the possibilities of the future of televisions.” In addition to making the new sets, Samsung and LG are also looking to expand the content on them. The two companies have developed partnerships with big Hollywood movie studios like Twentieth Century Fox, Paramount Pictures and Universal Studios. Along with this, both Samsung and LG are also getting involved in developing TV programming. We will have to wait to see what these TVs have to offer when they come to stores in stores, but it looks like these two will be making a big
