The measure, which is expected to be signed into effect by Mayor Greg Fischer, will prevent alcohol sales at all city-owned venues. The ban, which had been recommended by a task force, comes after years of debate and a summertime push to allow alcohol sales. Previous proposals, made by the city council and backed by Republican and Democratic lawmakers, were shelved amid pushback from residents. In May, about 40 people attended a meeting about the matter, with one person saying the Purcell wasn't "a family" place. The measure comes as several major events have been held in the city in recent years: The College Football Playoff championship in 2018, the 2018 Kentucky Derby, plus the Kentucky Governor's Mansion, the Kentucky International Convention Center and the Derby also hosted the NCAA Men's basketball championship games this year. In addition, the NCAA men's and women's volleyball championships are slated to be held in Louisville this year. Freedom Hall — which has already closed — is a 2,000-seat arena that opened in 1952. The Purcell will provide space for concerts and festivals. Those who have visited Freedom Hall say they are looking forward to bringing live music back. "I'm very excited about it," said local musician and columnist Jonathan Mayhew. "It's a cool building, and this will be a fun place to go to see live music, and it would certainly be a lot of fun to go see some good shows and bring back live music in Louisville." In a 1cdb36666d
