T. Ladd Allan Thomas Ladd (November 6, 1929 - February 16, 2020) was an American analytical psychologist and radar engineer, inventor of the first such device, and founder of the field of "Radar Science." He lived in Ridgefield, Connecticut, and died peacefully at his home on February 16, 2020 of natural causes at the age of 92. Allan Ladd was given an MA (1950) by Columbia University, a DSc (1962) by Purdue University, and an honorary doctorate (1991) by the University of Athens (graduating class) Career Ladd's first job in industrial psychology was working as a crude radar engineer for the Wilbur Wright Field, a nearby training center for the US Army Air Force, while a student at Purdue University. During the Korean War, some of Ladd's research was used to help develop the HAWK missile (high-altitude, attack wing), as were papers he had contributed to the German journal technical science during World War II. He was a professor at the City College of New York (1952-1953) and Purdue University (1952-1991), founder of the Cooper Union in 1960, and director of the School of Engineering at Manhattan College in New York (1968-1991), the first English-speaking degree-granting graduate school of engineering in the Northeast (before Cornell). He was a pioneer in the application of information theory to engineering decision making, (editor of the first book on the subject of the Physical Review, Communication Theory of Information, published in 1960) and in signaling theory, the branch of information theory applied to channels of communication such as radio frequency energy, as in radar, television, and cell phones. He invented and developed wireless communication technology such as the S-band, trilithon radio, T-band radio, and, with David Mugerauer, the distributed sensing systems and wireless sensor and actuator network (WSN) technology, which won Ladd the Spie 2003 Research, Development, and Commercialization Prize in the field of wireless sensor technology. The technology is now commercially available from the Molex Corporation as the Molex Precision Distributed Output Sensor and MicroActuator Network Probes. He has been
