A: It's a lot to decode. First notice that there's no chance that there'll be time between that length packet to get a next smaller packet. You can only get a shorter packet (the size of a control block of an airplane, also signed) from a larger packet (how smaller packet, also signed) is directly followed by (in the newer link) the packet of exactly the same length. Therefore we can't decode directly the info in the first packet (which now knows the number of keys): we have to decode them and then encrypt them. I believe that the first packet is just the keys, and then the entire packet is encrypted. So you need to: find a way to check if the first packet is the keys, if not: keep decoding, decrypting, and encrypting until you get it. once you get it, get the size and process the decrypted and encrypted data into the right data structure for your aircraft. According to the World Health Organization (WHO), cancer is the second leading cause of death, and an important contributor to global disease burden, accounting for 7.6 million deaths worldwide (WHO, 2012). Cancer therapies currently focus on killing malignant tumor cells while leaving healthy cells relatively unharmed. However, tumors can acquire resistance to chemotherapy and radiation. This phenomenon often results from a shift in their metabolism toward increased glycolysis to fuel growth and generation of biomass, as compared to normal differentiated cells which require oxidative phosphorylation. Therefore, therapies with an increased reliance on oxidative phosphorylation would be more effective against these tumors. Efforts to increase oxidative phosphorylation in tumor cells include inhibition of the pyruvate dehydrogenase complex by dichloroacetate or by the lipoxygenase inhibitor nordihydroguaiaretic acid (NDGA). Further efforts include the targeted expression of two electron transport chain genes, cytochrome bc<sub>1</sub>-c<sub>1</sub> and cytochrome c. Cytochrome c plays a central role in the mitochondrial electron transport chain, where it acts as an electron donor for cytochrome bc<sub>1</sub>-c<sub>1</sub>.

Cytochrome bc<sub>1</sub>-c<sub>1</sub> is part of the ubiquinone-binding protein complex in the inner mitochondrial membrane. It transfers two electrons from reduced cytochrome c to ubiquinone (coenzyme Q), thereby reducing ubiquinone to ubiquinol (elimination of reduced
