BubbleStream Jen Eason More than Just the Bust Synopsis More than Just the Bust is the story of a father's journey to change the destructive traditions of a Caribbean country through his family. The real miracle of the story is that a father can change a culture, through his actions. The story's "true" hero is a father who understands that every child in his culture will not survive without a male figure in the home, and must therefore change the culture he lives in. Author Biography Jen Eason is a second-generation resident of the Caribbean and the daughter of Haitian immigrants. She graduated from Virginia Tech with a Bachelor's Degree in education in 1995. She worked as a classroom teacher for several years in Virginia and Washington, DC, before moving to San Francisco in 2006 to pursue a career in higher education. More than Just the Bust is her first novel.

Author Insight The New Man The most important conversation I had with the author during this book's writing was about the origin of the fictional New Man. Jen's father had only been in this country for about a year, and had met many individuals of different ethnicities. She asked him to explain his own thoughts about the New Man (her term). He told her that the New Man is the man of today. He is someone who is able to make adjustments in his life to meet the needs of different people, whether as a traditional family, a single parent, or a man who has to deal with adoption or divorce. Book Excerpt More than Just the Bust It wasn't until I took my husband's car for repairs that I realized something: despite his commitments to his friends, his ex-wife, his new family, and the demands of his friends in the military, his car needed repairs. That was our breaking point. We split, and for more than five years, I didn't see him. I felt like I deserved a break. I didn't want to do any of the things women do when they're feeling sorry for themselves. They write snotty Facebook status updates, play video games, and go to bars. I didn't want to be that person.Q: .NET MVC Ajax communication with PHP - HttpHandlers not working I'm working on a ASP.NET MVC 5 project and in some
