High-performance analytical techniques are very important for a complete understanding of chemical processes and for the identification of novel compounds in the environment. Among these techniques, the radiation source, the detector, and the data processing units play an important role. In addition, detector and data-processing units usually need to be coupled with sample containers to provide the essential physicochemical capabilities of ionic liquids (ILs) as a new class of ionic solvents. In this regard, the focus of this investigation has been on the design and implementation of a suitable quantum box for chemical ionization mass spectrometry (CIMS) for the fast and reliable molecular recognition of cations and anions. We describe the design and implementation of a CIMS quantum box that is able to accept up to five ions simultaneously and present two analytes (nitrobenzene and naphthalene) from these ions. The quantum box is designed as a custom designed microfluidic chip and uses the surface acoustic wave (SAW) technology to achieve the ion transport in this small-scale solid-state microfluidic system. The system has been utilized for the analysis of ILs and ionic liquids (ILs) with different structural and composition properties. The performance of the system has been extensively tested by comparing its chemical ionization mass spectra with that of the respective ILs. This study shows that this SAW microfluidic quantum box is a promising tool for the fast and reliable chemical characterization of ILs and ILs as a new class of ionic solvents.Artikkel dateert fra 1998/99 og inntil nå er det kommet 18 sesonger, hvor antall kamper har ligget på ca. 450.
