The suit, filed in federal court in San Francisco on Thursday, claims that both Sony and the hackers who infiltrated its systems last month intended the movie as a one-shot release. It accuses the Silicon Valley giant of exposing users to "immense and unspeakable" harm by enabling the hackers to stream the movie and post the film's trailer online. The announcement from Sony Pictures Entertainment came the same day that the hacking group Guardians of Peace claimed responsibility for the breach. Hackers used a satirical film as a cover because their identity and motive remain unknown. North Korea has yet to take responsibility for the breach. The studio and the cybersecurity firm Mandiant, which found the fingerprints of the North Korean hackers on the Sony Pictures' internal networks, also accuse the online video site of infringing on their trademarks and of failing to do enough to prevent the movie from being posted illegally. Because it is not a traditional distributor, Sony has struggled to get distribution for The Interview. The movie's only traditional release is for a limited theatrical run in New York City and Los Angeles starting on Christmas Day. The online release of the movie, which features two unlikely would-be assassins, is proving to be more of a challenge. It was supposed to be available for streaming on YouTube and other video-sharing sites, but was removed last week. The stream was later restored, but users were still able to watch the movie. It could not be previewed in theaters, and it has yet to be available to rent on Redbox kiosks. Pablo S. Gil, senior vice president and assistant general counsel for global legal affairs at Sony, said the video-sharing site had not told the studio what it was going to do with the movie. The company asked YouTube to remove the movie and offered to pay the company fees, but the online video service declined, he said. "For whatever reason,
