
Ahnlab V3 Internet Security Serial Number

we had a good number of collapses here, largely because the products have been maintained by the same individuals for some time and builds are now required to include all the samples of those problems. the stability of the product has improved of course, but not by enough to have this product reach the required standard for a vb100 award. unfortunately the results for this product are based on a test which i suspect was not fair, with a large percentage of the samples in the set having been removed. the test is now carried out, but as the developers haven't had a change for a while they are unlikely to make much change to the way they go about their tasks. as the guys at cobra security have announced that the release will not be the most recent, i am concerned that they may come under some criticism for not being up to date. that said, the majority of the changes have been bug fixes, which normally have a good effect on the detection levels of most products. there are a few changes which affect detection somewhat and one of these is a change to how cobra security manages its various license keys, a situation which has been flagged to them. i will keep a close eye on their progress. cobra security's scores have increased steadily since the start of the year and since they have not been doing any real harm this month's vb100 award is well deserved. in addition to our regular set of criteria, we now have a third set of criteria for scoring products. these can be viewed under the 'ad name system' section, and range from scoring products on the basis of a detected level of technical sophistication, to picking out products based on a user-friendly interface. the scoring criteria used are collated from those provided by interpol , securelist , securelist , pc world , symantec , fireeye and sophos .

we received an addition of about 20 new files in the second service pack for windows server. while many of these are infrequent file extensions, several have been added, and the product's ability to block new files looks rather poor when dealing with its old file set. once again the results here do not reflect the reality of the situation, as most of the set of 25 samples were removed to facilitate the evaluation of the product. this was the case in the end with a number of the products, and the test was completed in a way which is anything but fair on those products which depend on a functioning environment in order to work and which spend many seconds or minutes scanning the files rather than passing along the information in an instant. the fact that the product managed to extract information from every file did not stop the under-representation of some items in the test and the result was that the full set of wildlist samples were found to be the most reliable samples in the test. another run of the test, and while b-e-a-ut had been trimmed to about one third of its original size, it still managed to claim a vb100 award, remaining in contention despite missing a file in the set. again the focus was on the quality of detection. this detection rate is a bit of a mystery, given the number of crashes and the time taken to remove them all. it would appear that b-e-a-ut's still got a fight on its hands. now - thanks to a combination of the wildlist wildcard regex used, the inclusion of the 15k samples in the benchmark and the removal of those samples in order to protect the base set - this result could be justified.
