The U.S. is a world leader in medical innovation, but far behind its European counterparts, according to a new report from the Pew Health Group, published on Thursday. Dr. Sarah Trammell, director of the Pew Health Group's Health Innovation Project, said the report - which found that the U.S. spends twice as much on health care as other countries and one-fifth as much on health innovation - highlights how it falls behind competitors on some measures. "The U.S. is outpacing other major economies like Britain, Germany and France in the volume of research and development spending on new drugs and medical technologies," Trammell said. But it lags behind countries like Sweden, Singapore and Japan on other measures, according to the report. The U.S. spends $400 billion on health care, compared to $520 billion for France and $750 billion for Britain, according 04aeff104c
