Here the camera can open your images for backup and then move to editing. I used it for years to backup my images (this was before the iMac could take image files of that size -- 16 megapixels). I would copy my images to a flash drive and then place this digital camera on the iMac, and it would copy the images from the camera to the iMac over a network connection. It was simple, you didn't have to account for "convenience" or the way a "user experience" would affect the final image.
